To Whom it May Concern,

The following letter is in support of Rayne Moulton and her decision to withdraw from the LPN Program at NBCC.

When Rayne began her classes she had previously completed a psychoeducational assessment to have specific accommodations in place for her learning disabilities and her ADHD. In addition to the recommendations from the psych. ed assessment we also included a full document from CADDAC with suggested post secondary accommodations for students with ADHD that we worked on during therapy sessions.

Unfortunately Rayne went into classes without any accommodations provided to her, even after repeated requests and contact was made with the school for her accommodations to be set up and in place. During the course of her classes Rayne's anxiety increased dramatically, as she was struggling in school to complete the work, her assignments and testing all while receiving no support from the school. As her anxiety increased, her mental health and overall wellbeing started to decline. Rayne was experiencing increased levels of stress, overwhelmed with course load and no accommodations, she was feeling unsupported from the school, felt like she wasn't set up for success. She was constantly exhausted and tired, experienced increased mood instabilities and irritability, eating less and distributed sleep patterns.

The decision for Rayne not to return to school was not made lightly, and there was a lot of consideration and conversation had with her prior to submitting the withdrawal from courses.

I believe if Rayne was set up and supported from the start, she could have had a different outcome with her academics and mental health.

If you have any other questions, please don't hesitate to reach out,
